

Dear Sir or Madam,

As the supervisor Wendi, I have the privilege of working with him for over one year. I am writing this letter to recommend him to your program. Polished and capable as he is, I believe in his abilities and future.

Wendi is strong and dedicated. He has proven his ability of multi-tasking, prioritizing and working under pressure multiple times. When still in graduate school, he started as a junior project manager in my firm, and became a project manager afterwards. The intrinsic feature of the work means that there will always be people at the upper or lower chain. One has to finish his work in a timely manner so that others can bring it to the next phase. So in the beginning, I would organize the work for him in a streamlined fashion. One day he changed my mind. When we were struck by an unforeseen project, the workload of the team exploded. So I let him run one project team by himself, not only doing the work but managing the workload for others. Yet this is just the beginning. Later I realized that there was another project seeking the special technique of using grasshopper to be finished. Knowing that he is the my best man in grasshopper, I asked him to step in. Various tasks did not break him. Both projects went well and what surprised me most is his ability to categorize and prioritize work for the teams. Such ability enables the team to work more efficiently, without the situation that one person is working crazily while another one is sitting around, waiting for colleagues to pass on their work. It was then that I decided that Wendi was ready to take on more responsibilities.

Wendi does not always wait to be given more responsibilities. Considering the huge amount of files we receive from different parties, it is very important to store files in a clear manner. Reorganizing files takes a tremendous amount of time. There has been a way of organizing files in the office for quite some time and it is not totally outdated. So we have been reluctant improving the structure. Wendi came to me and suggested that there were new structures to categorize information. What makes it even better is that his ability of coding enables him to write a program to transfer the files without an individual doing all the heavy and boring work one folder after another. Thanks to him, we are using a more efficient structure. That was when I knew that he had been learning coding as a hobby.

Even though not having a traditional CS related background, I am believe in his ability to acquire such knowledge in a short time. After talking with him regarding his decision, I can feel his dedication. Pursuing for a second degree, just like different pressure and obstacles in work, will not break him, but provide him a proper platform.

Being a skillful, reliable young man with a clear mind even under pressure, Wendi has given me every reason to recommend him. I believe in his success.

Alex Lee,
COO
XCG Harvest Render Group